PC Magazine Italia: a highly successful financial accounting program, addressed towards small-medium sized businesses and clubs

26.03.2006

The highly respected Italian computer magazine, PC Magazine, published a review on Banana Accounting in its March issue which underlines how Banana permits small to medium size businesses and clubs to create professional financial accounts and balance sheets in a completely independent way: "light but professional software that can be used directly from a CD without installation". In conclusion, the article dwells on the new partnership between the Banana Accounting product and the Italian Whag from which, at the end of 2005, MosaicoToBanana was born, a low cost management-accounting set-up destined for the small-size business market that integrates the Banana product with Erp Mosaico Sorgenteaperto.

A Banana in the Management Context

30.01.2006

In their most recent issue, the Italian Computer Dealer & Var magazine speaks about Banana since Molinari Snc (vendors of garage equipment) uses it for their financial accounting. The article talks about this company being a prime example of how small Italian businesses are using the latest technology. As far as their daily management is concerned, they use Mosaico Sorgente Aperto from Whag which, however, only takes them to a certain point. This product, in fact, doesn't cover accounting (double-entry, balances and cost centers). Having been alerted to the problem by some of their clients, Whag got themselves moving and has clinched a partnership deal with Banana.ch, the company that invented Banana Accounting, which is exactly what the Milanese software house was looking for. So we are working towards bringing to fruition a tool to be called MosaicoToBanana that will allow Banana Accounting to read the Mosaico Sorgente Aperto data. The market target: small to medium-sized businesses and professional studios, it's one and the same.
